

Disclosure statement for “Should Aid Reward Performance?”

Financial support for the overall PNPM Generasi program and the evaluation surveys has come from the Government of Indonesia, the World Bank, the Decentralization Support Facility, the Netherlands Embassy, and the PNPM Support Facility, which consists of donors from Australia, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, and Denmark, and the Spanish Impact Evaluation Fund, and funding for the analysis came in part from NIH under grant P01 HD061315. The PNPM Generasi program during the period evaluated here was funded in part by the World Bank, and subsequently the program has been funded in part by AusAID and the Millenium Challenge Corporation. The views expressed in this paper are those of the authors alone and do not represent the views of the World Bank or any of the many individuals or organizations acknowledged here.

Specific disclosures:

Olken was a consultant to the World Bank for part of the period under this evaluation (ending in 2008). Olken has been the PI on separate grants from the World Bank and AusAID to support randomized impact evaluations in Indonesia on targeting, corruption, and other social protection issues and to support the establishment of the Jameel Poverty Action Lab’s office in Indonesia.

Onishi consulted for the World Bank throughout the period under study, and presently is employed by the World Bank.

Wong worked full time for the World Bank throughout the period under study, and is presently employed by the World Bank.

IRB Information:

This project went through the IRB process at Harvard in 2006 (when Olken was at Harvard) and again at MIT in 2008 (when Olken moved to MIT). The Harvard Committee on the Use of Human Subjects in Research determined in 2006 that the project was exempt from human subjects review as a government program (Application # F13663-101, Date 4/28/2006). The MIT Committee on the Use of Humans as Experimental Subjects approved the study following expedited review (COUHES #0806002801, Date 7/14/2008).