

Stimulating Local Public Employment: Do General Grants Work?

Disclosure Statement of Matz Dahlberg

I, Matz Dahlberg, hold a research position at Uppsala University (Professor in Economics). The research for this paper was conducted as part of my position. Neither Uppsala University nor myself have any financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper. While writing this paper, I was also an affiliated researcher at the Institute for Evaluation of Labour Market and Education Policy (www.ifau.se), a research institute under the Swedish Ministry of Employment, situated in Uppsala. The objective of IFAU is to promote, support and carry out scientific evaluations. Even though IFAU is organized under the Swedish government, researchers at IFAU are completely free to publish any research findings that are of sufficiently high scientific quality.

Institutional Review Board (IRB) Approval

Most of the data used in the paper is at the aggregate (municipal) level. The exception is Section V, where the original data is at the individual level, which we then aggregated ourselves. This individual-level data was made available to us from The Institute for Evaluation of Labour Market and Education Policy, which at the time did not require any IRB Approval (or the Swedish equivalent thereof).
