

Of Mice and Academics: Examining the Effect of Openness on Innovation

Fiona Murray¹, Philippe Aghion², Mathias Dewatripont³, Julian Kolev⁴ and Scott Stern⁵

Fiona Murray:

The author receives research funding from the National Science Foundation's Science of Science and Innovation Policy (NSF-SciSIP) program, the Sloan Foundation, and MIT's Sloan School of Management.

Philippe Aghion:

The author declares that he has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

Mathias Dewatripont:

The author declares that he has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

Julian Kolev:

The author declares that he has no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

Scott Stern:

This author has drawn on the findings of this research for compensated speaking engagements and to offer policy advice in a number of settings.

¹MIT Sloan School of Management

²Harvard University and NBER

³National Bank of Belgium, ECARES, Universite Libre de Bruxelles and CEPR

⁴SMU Cox School of Business

⁵MIT Sloan School of Management and NBER