Law, Regulation and the Business Climate: The Nature and Influence of the World Bank Doing Business Project

Timothy Besley

The author was a member of the World Bank panel which assessed the Doing Business Project in 2013. He received no remuneration for his input into the panel's work. As part of this work, he had extensive discussions about the Doing Business project with a range of stakeholders including NGOs as well as officials in the World Bank. He is now a member of the Doing Business Advisory Panel for which he also receives no remuneration. He has, however, served as a paid consultant for a range of assignments at the World Bank throughout his career and is currently chairing a review of the Development Economics Vice-Presidency in which the Doing Business Project is located. Since its inception, the author has participated in events at the World Bank where the Doing business project was discussed and presented his views, publicly and privately, at such meetings. He has also used the Doing Business indicators and the World Enterprise surveys in some of his research. He is a member of the steering group of the International Growth Centre which is funded by the UK Department for International Development. In the past three years, he has received support from the European Research Council, the Canadian Institute for Advanced Research and the UK Economic and Social Research Council.
